

Where does Right Populist Policy lead to?

The latest observation for the USA, depicting the results of right populist policy:

- Donald Trump finds himself in a weaker position, than he has been in ever before, ahead of the U.S. midterm elections.
- Rising costs of living, and high energy prices
- The highest state deficit the USA ever had and no willingness to reduce it.
 - Driving the return rate of US treasuries to a critical high value for the world finance system
 - US government has to compete with AI-Companies on capital at high interest rates
- The war in Ukraine - which he had promised to end quickly, is not ending due to the weakness of Donald Trump to put pressure on Putin
- The war Trump started with Iran unable to win, is eroding the trust placed in him.
- When it comes to the economy - an area where he once held the advantage, Americans now place more confidence in the Democrats than in Trump's Republicans.
- Still spending time on self-glorification, his Ballroom and renaming places not belonging to the USA.

This weakness recently led to trust-destroying panic reactions in Trumps foreign policy:

- Ostensibly to lower energy prices, Trump is opening U.S. ports to Russian diesel,
 - while he earlier blamed India for buying Russian oil, taking this as pretext to impose high tariffs on India.
 - In addition Trump stopped sanctions proposed by L. Graham against Russia, which he signed recently and which were voted for by a large majority of the US Senat (86%) and the House of Representatives
 - thereby paving the way for Vladimir Putin's return to the international stage.
 - And for what? Strong doubts remain, that Russian diesel quantities can influence the price at US gas stations at all.
- Trump blames the Ukraine President for having caused high energy prices by attacking Russian oil refineries - denying his own responsibility due to the still pending war against Iran
- Trump has suggested that Volodymyr Zelenskyy should step down, claiming that the Ukrainian leader has no interest in peace
 - while turning down Star Shield speed, preventing Ukraine defense against Russian drone attacks
 - and while withholding already paid Patriot missiles for Ukraine defense against Russian missiles.
- Zelenskyy has described this as a betrayal.
- For the first time, neutral OECD representatives are not invited to observe US Mid-term elections

These developments raise critical questions and pinpoints to the lack of European influence :

- "What happens if a beleaguered U.S. president abandons Ukraine - allowing Putin to profit from the resulting crisis on both sides of the Atlantic?"
- "Could the fear of war and inflation lead to further polarization of society - in the USA and Europe, with consequences that are impossible to foresee?"
- How fair will the Midterm elections be? Will their result be accepted by the US President?
- What effect will the destroyed trust have on European voter behavior?
- Do European Right Populist have more to offer for Europe than Donald Trump for the USA?
- What is the European response to this development?
